

PPPL – A Lab of the Future

Mission first, people always. That’s our philosophy at Princeton Plasma Physics Laboratory. Our 600+ employees are comprised of scientists, engineers, and operations staff committed to advancing the science and development of fusion — a clean, safe, and virtually limitless energy source that could power the world.

We believe advancing science requires a diverse, empowered, and inclusive workforce, one in which all voices are heard and all viewpoints are valued. This belief is guiding us as we become a “Laboratory of the Future,” which includes not only more staff and expanded research focuses, but also a physical transformation of our campus. At the heart of this evolution is the Princeton Plasma Innovation Center (PPIC), a multimillion-dollar facility that will serve as a hub for international fusion research.

We’re contributing to a more sustainable future... and we need your help to get there.

The Ideal Location

Our facility sits on 91 acres and is located at Princeton University’s Forrestal Campus, approximately three miles north of the main campus. We enjoy a central New Jersey location, with train access to both NYC and Philadelphia.

The tree-lined town of Princeton and neighboring areas are yours to explore, rich with shopping, restaurants, culture and history. We also have excellent schools available for your family, both public and private.

In central New Jersey, you can hike one of the many parks or trails, visit the quaint Delaware River communities, or explore the state’s coastline and shore towns, all of which are easily accessible from Princeton.
